We are excited to share the first details on “HyperMotion Technology,” and what it can deliver to the football fan. Johan Cruyff, one of football's greatest talents, explained “There are many titles for the FIFA series, such as FIFA 2000, FIFA 2002 and FIFA 2004. They are very popular in Europe and in Asia as well. I had the great honor to be the first player that received a FIFA title for a game I made. I still remember what it felt like. This current title, FIFA 2017, will be the best title for players in the years to come. We already have the FIFA FIFA 19. But this is the FIFA 2018, the new FIFA.” Cruyff continued: “I'm really pleased that EA Sports has once again chosen me as the first developer to introduce their new incredible technology. I'm really excited about this “FIFA 20” edition!” Creating an authentic football experience

Created by the creators of the FIFA series, the FIFA Development team has worked on hundreds of hours of gameplay based on real-world player motion capture data. The gameplay data was captured by players playing at full-speed in full-body motion capture suits. With high-speed video and advanced visual tools, the team created a powerful modeling system that delivers millions of animations and takes them to the next level. “The core gameplay experience we’re delivering to our fans is something we believe is more authentic to the sport than anything we’ve done before,” said Kylie Chang, Studio Head, Sports Interactive. “We’re taking advantage of technology that captures every move and gesture a player makes on the pitch to deliver the most authentic simulation of the sport.” “We know that capturing the emotions, the style, and the speed of real-life football matches is incredibly complex,” said Aaron McHardy, Creative Director, Sports Interactive. “Capturing the same lightning-fast, unpredictable, and personal style of play is a challenge that is unique to football and other sports. But working with the FIFA Development team, we’ve had extraordinary success building off of ideas and expertise that span football legends like Johan Cruyff, to now capture a completely new level of movement realism.” Cruyff explained what players can expect: “I already said that players can choose between two styles, and these are the goalkeeper

FIFA is the world's leading sports franchise and the official videogame of the FIFA World Cup™. The game captures the authenticity of the FIFA World Cup™, and features the most comprehensive set of official World Cup™ gameplay features ever released in a videogame. The FIFA franchise has sold more than 100 million copies worldwide, across all platforms, and consistently generates more revenue each year than any other videogame franchise. More than 500 million EA SPORTS FIFA players have connected with FIFA and its players over the past 25 years. FIFA Vision™ brings the thrill of the World Cup™ to life on screen with accurate stadiums, goals and players using all-new graphics techniques. The accuracy of the game's on-field action is supported by revolutionary gameplay innovations, including new dribble controls, real-world atmospheric crowd noise, team tactical play, and dynamic player movement. FIFA Intelligence Technology simulates the same complex gameplay by analyzing the on-field action, understanding how teams perform and how players naturally move in different situations, translating that intelligence into the best action choices for the player. When the player performs particular actions, like a through pass, using these new controls, the result can be replicated perfectly in game.
